Lawyer Delmas Takes Charge of the Defense of Harry Thaw And Straightens Out Tangles Which Menaced Client's Case MERESKELETON

"I did not know Stanford White," he said to Delmar, "but a certain man was several time pointed out to me as Stanford White. With the can thus point dout to me I once had a conversation at Madison Square

"What was the conversation." asked Delmas. Here Jerome had an objection: He insisted that the witness could not ewear that the man with whom he talked was really Mr. White, For the present Mr. Dolmas said he would withdraw Mr. Howard in ## who talked with Howard as Stanford White. EVENING WORLD MAN ON STAND.

In Howard's stead he called to the stand Martin Green, an Evening World special writer.

Mr. Green as he corrugated his high brow told Mr. Delmas this story: "I was on the roof of the Madison Square Garden on the night of the shooting. I was sitting at a table about thirty feet from where White sat when he was shot. I saw Mr. Thaw some time before the shooting. also saw him just after the shooting. I saw him disarmed,

"I noticed Thaw's appearance and actions at the time of the shooting

When I first saw him after the shooting he had the pistol raised over his head. He had just shot White. His face was very pale. His eyes were glaring wildly. They looked as if they meant to pop out of his head. His tips were black and hanging loosely. His entire appearance was very

QUESTION IS OBJECTED TO.

Mr. Jerome objected to the question. He insisted that Mr. Green as a layman was not qualified to give an opinion touching upon the rational or irrational condition of the defendant. Mr. Delmas read from a Court of Appeals decision to show the question had been properly framed and

Mr. Jerome said he would like to quote a few subsequent rulings or the same subject. He asked for a roccss in order to consult the books Justice Fitzgerald said he would rule later.

At this juncture Mr. Hartridge produced the letter of Bouman which Jerome had asked for earlier in the session. Hartridge was anxious to read the letter. Jerome foxily declined to make the letter a part of the record, which would mean that its contents must go to the jury. He said he would take up the matter with Hartridge.

THAW IRRATIONAL, SAYS GREEN.

Mr. Green was called back to the stand after recess. Mr. Delmas requestion to meet the language of the statutes. Then Justice Fitzgerald overruled Mr. Jerome's objection, which was a considerable rictory for the defense, and permitted Green to answer

"I SHOULD SAY, JUDGING BY HIS ACTS, THAT MR. THAW WAS IRRATIONAL AT THE TIME," SAID THE WITNESS.

"That's all," said Mr. Delmas. Mr. Jerome began the cross-examination.

dr. Green said he had first seen Harry Thaw about thirty or forty minutes before the killing of White.
"When I first saw him he was walking back and forth in the aish on the Twenty-sixth street side of the roof. The next time I saw him he was raising the smoking pistol, after firing the third shot, and glancing about the garden," said Mr. Green. THAW'S FRIEND ON THE STAND.

Now the defense called Thomas McCaleb, Thaw's friend and one of hair, of middle height and medium weight. He was nattily dressed. He said he lived in San Francisco and was twenty-six years old, although he didn't look it. Delmas questioned him. "I was with Harry Thaw at the Cafe Martin on the evening of the shooting," he said. "Later we all went to the Madison Square Roof Gar-den. There were several of us in the party. "The show was still in progress when we got ready to leave. Mrs.

Harry Thaw arose to go out first. I got up with her and we started out together discussing the play in trivial commonplaces. I don't know whether Mr. Thaw was with us or not. I didn't look back to see.

JUST AFTER THE TRAGEDY.

"We had almost reached the arch leading to the elevator when I heard three shots. Mrs. Thaw turned around and cried out: 'My God, he's shot him!' She was pale, excited and very much frightened. I looked in the Thaw with a revolver, held butt upward, in his hand. He was coming day a bill that aims at the extinction

This ended the direct examination, and Mr. Jerome was now miraculously restored to life and speech and movement.
